Resource Flows to the South

Resource position in the South is fairly strong in the recent years compared to the past. Along with rising domestic savings and investment, international resource flows to the South have registered phenomenal growth. With surge in South-South investment flows, the South has emerged as the hub of global FDI activities. Most of the countries in South are not only leading recipients of FDI inflows but also act as major origin of FDI flows. FDI outflows from the South have increased significantly even during the global recession, and converging to the volume of FDI outflows from the North. Besides FDI flows, remittances have been a major component of resource flows to the South. The share of remittances flows to the South has grown dramatically since 2000, indicating a strong resource base of the Southern economies.
